MERRY ALPHABET.

A was an Archer who shot at a frog
With an Arrow that might have been shorter;
He shot at a frog, that sat on a log,
And made it jump into the water.

B was a Butcher who had a big dog Always on hand for a pow-wow;
It would bite, it would bark, from daylight to dark,
O you should have heard it Bow-wow!

C was a Captain all covered with lace,
With sword and with trinkets to rattle;
He was fond of fine clothes, but you need not suppose That he ever took part in a battle.

D was a Doctor who rode in a gig,
And many good people attended;

And when they were ill he gave them a pill,
And soon their diseases were mended.

E is an Engineer firm at his post,
To rules and to signals no stranger;
Of his train he takes care and the passengers there,
And whistles "Down brakes!" when there's danger.

F was a Farmer who followed the plough,

And planted his seeds in their season;
He could rake, he could hoe, he could reap, he could mow,
And was proud of his farm with good reason.

G was a Glutton who ate like a pig, With his nose quite into the platter;
But though he would stuff he could not get enough,
And kept on growing fatter and fatter.

H was a Hunter who went with his gun Where rabbits and squirrels were plenty;

Much powder and shot he wasted, but not One hit did he make in twenty.

I was an Indian ready for war,
In boldness no white man could match him;
And when on his steed he rode off with speed
'Twas no easy matter to catch him.

J was a Jockey who rode a fine horse-- His colors were red and yellow;

He rode at such pace that he won a great race,
And was voted a splendid fellow.

K was a King who sat up on a throne
And thought he could live in clover;
But so bad was he found that the people around Were glad when his reign was over.

L was a Lady who had a white hand
All covered with beautiful rings;

She could knit, she could sew, she could play, and I know
Do many more lady-like things.

M was a Miser who hoarded up gold, Just for the love of such treasure;

And never a cent for clothing he spent,
Or for anything else that gave pleasure.

N was a News-boy who ran through the street, Intent upon selling his papers;

And when all were sold, as I have been told,
He cut up ridiculous capers.

O was the Organ that stood in the church;
O the Organist played it In such a fine way, it gave joy every day

To the Organ-builder who made it.

P was a Parson who wore a black gown;
The Bible he kept ever near him;

And so well did he preach, and such good lessons teach,
That the young and the old went to hear him.

Q was a Quarrel 'twixt two little boys,
And both were so greatly offended, That they fought and they fought, till one of them thought To cry "Quarter!" and then it was ended.

R was the Racket they used as a bat--- Richard, and Robert and Dennis---

When they met on the lawn where the net was out-drawn

For their favorite game of Lawn Tennis.

S was a Sailor who followed the Sea,
And none were so gay as his lordship,
This jolly Jack tar, who knew every spar,
And was always at home when aboard ship.

T was a Tailor who mended a coat, Oh, but his fingers were nimble!

The seams were all prest by a goose, and the rest
Was done with a needle and thimble.

U---an Umbrella was borne o'er the head

Of a dear little Urchin, named Billy,
When a sudden gust came, and oh, what a shame!
'Twas changed to a big water-lily!

V was the Vase, in a missing valise;

W the Watchman who found it;

X was the ten dollar bill he had then,
With two or three extra around it.

Y was a Yacht that bore a blue flag, And sailed off with speed, so amazing,

That she and her crew received their just due,

And were worthy the prize and the praising.

Z was a Zany—a silly young goose, Who thought it would be very jolly

To stay out of school, and to act like a fool;

But he lived to repent of his folly.
